Faculty Advisors

When Grant W. Cleland and Mrs. J. Guinan Eppinger were appointed advisors for the Class of January, 1927, the selection was considered by the entire class to be a most fortunate and happy one. Both were very friendly and desirous of promoting class activities in the most advantageous manner possible; both considered every member of the class a friend.

The loss of Mr. Cleland through a most unfortunate accident in 1925 was partially nullified with the appointment of George J. Moyer to be his successor. Mr. Moyer had the unusual advantage of having known most of the boys since their entrance into East High School through study hall contact. This acquaintance with the boys Mr. Moyer has fostered tenderly throughout his advisorship and is now the friend of all those who were privileged in having met him.

Girl class advisors in East High School have been consistently good, and so it must be an exceptionally good advisor who can stand out. Mrs. Eppinger has been just such a rare counsellor. Always at the service of the class, Mrs. Eppinger has been tireless in her interest and activity.

In the short time that Mr. Cleland was with the class as advisor he succeeded in fixing himself firmly with the boys both through his friendly manner and gracious service. It was with great joy indeed that the class learned of Mr. Cleland's return to teaching after his accident.

Prelude

My thoughts once ascended the hilltop of Reminiscence.

*A new horizon strangely bedimmed
in a mist of the past,*

*Whispered to me a song,
proffering with mocking deviltry,*

*A portrait of memory,
long since forgotten, yet tinged*

With an azure of delight.

Class History

When Darwin was munching his cud of evolution, he permitted one morsel of thought to remain undigested. Careful as he was to fit the ancestor of man with a tail, he forgot to present to the world the developments that occur in a group of human beings. It remained for the class of January twenty-seven, abundantly talented as it is, to correct Darwin's forgetfulness, and exemplify itself as a type in the evolution of groups.

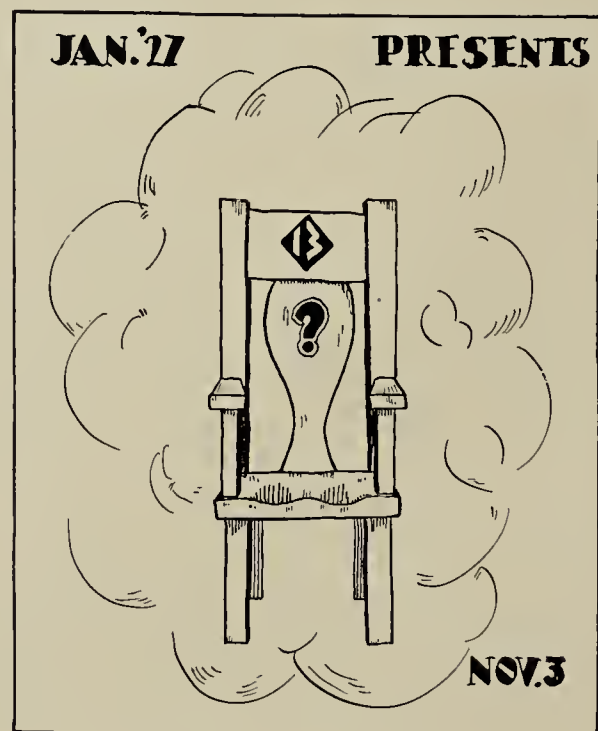

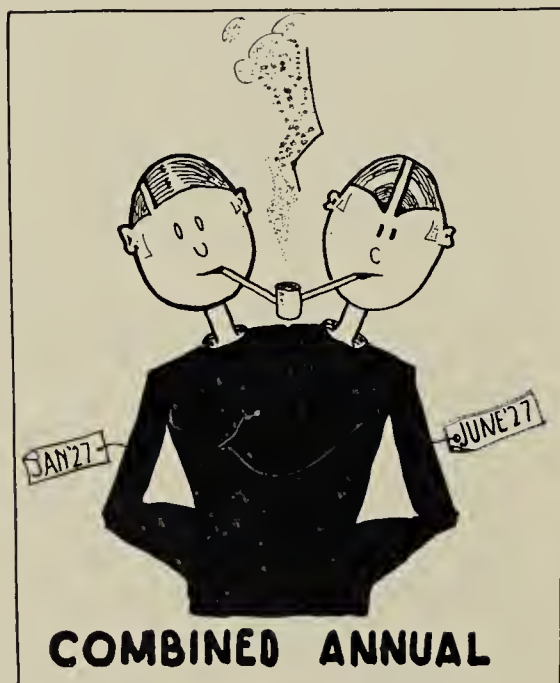

In this philanthropic cause, I take prideful pleasure in stating that their conduct in East High has been so significant that the knowledge of it might even be barred from Tennessee classrooms, and used by some eminent scientist in a book to supplement Darwin's "Origin of Species." The author of such a work might well consider the following data:

PERIOD OF FECUNDITY: January 1923-1924:

Some of the Annexites discovered that they would receive their diplomas together in January 1927, and immediately began to respect each other. This half-formed friendship developed into an organization with voluntary advisors and dues. The following semester came the exportation of the partly organized class of January 1927, to the Main Building. A barbaric species of pupils who hailed from junior high schools and were in the habit of going about corridors in white shirtsleeves, entered East High that semester and were automatically recruited into the ranks of January 1927. PERIOD OF FERMENTATION: January 1925-1926:

East High School authorities officially sanctioned the class and furnished it with two shepherds, Grant W. Cleland and Mrs. Jessie Eppinger. The class met as a whole for the first time and elected Robert Young, president; Mary Sutherland, vice-president; Ada Vick, secretary; Richard Burns, treasurer.

The following September Mr. Cleland was unable to return to East High School and was replaced by George J. Moyer, known at that time to all the boys of the class as "that study hall tyrant" and in a few weeks to the rest of the class as "that co-operative big boy."

To name their first social event the "Junior Jinx," the class held it on Friday evening, November 13. So effective was the cider and music at the party that each merry-maker could call each other by his first name and middle initial before the evening was over.

PERIOD OF ACCOMPLISHMENTS: January 1926-1927.

As seniors, members of the class made January 1927, historical. During the term the class made its bow in dramatics with the presentation of Philip Barry's "Youngest." John Needham and Marjorie Ward taking the leading parts in the play caused as much favorable comment as the subject of bombs at an anarchist meeting.

The following term the economizing plan of combining with the June seniors in the publication of a class book was accepted by the class. Mitchell Rappaport, famous son of the famous class, was entrusted with the editorship of the January 1927 division of the book.

The class succeeded in draping the school with the haunted atmosphere of rotting spooks and icy hands by presenting the mystery play, "The Thirteenth Chair."

A final celebration of Halloween was staged as the "Senior Scurry." The affair had its exciting moments. Paul A. McGhee strolled in unexpectedly from New York, George S. Carhart donned an orange and black hat and danced, Harold Fagan assumed a gruff tone in his voice and told fortunes behind locked doors.

Senior Day was the climax of every pleasantry connected with the business of attending school. Every class member successfully hid his identity as a civilized, church-going citizen of Rochester. Long earrings, glaringly-colored bits of drapery, enough jewelry to start a red-painted jewelry store, and a sufficient supply of black shirts to soothe Mussolini, went to transform the class of January, 1927, into a band of miscellaneous-looking beings that resembled a stranded group of Hollywood extras. The afternoon of Senior Day was sedately spent at the Eastman Theatre. In the evening there was a banquet that served as an excellent excuse for absence on the following Monday, and dancing.

One night members of the class were given speeches, diplomas, and handshakes, and the curtain was rung down for January 1927. A few in the class, when the call came for encores, remained after graduation to instruct new seniors on "Perfect Behavior in East High." The others were satisfied to face life's jokes and to occasionally make toasts with mysterious liquid mixtures to "The Class of January 1927, that corrected Darwin's forgetfulness."

EATON HAMMOND

MRS. J. J. TOOLAN

Faculty Advisors

Mrs. Toolan and Mr. Hammond have been more than class advisors to us. They have actually been the steam behind the engines. It was they who planned our successes and aided us in carrying them through. No class play or party took place without their cheerful presence and, undoubtedly, they made many sacrifices in order to take part in our activities. Their loyalty was constant; their faith in us profound. It is with great regret that we must part, but in our hearts we shall always cherish the memories of those who were sharers in both our joys and sorrows.

Class Poem

*Our class spirit hovers gently
O'er the halls of memories dear,
Where our feet have trodden so lightly,
The short time we were here.*

*Our eyes grow dim at the thought
Of meeting our classmates no more
In the spot where our friendships were wrought,
The school where we gathered the lore——*

*Of each day accomplishing more,
Perfecting the work that is ours.
May those lessons that we have absorbed
Endure all our living hours.*

To Be Drunk? But What Is It To Be Nothing Else But Inebriated!

Jacob Abramson, June '27
East High School
Rochester, N. Y.

April, 1927

Dear Editor:

You asked me a while ago to write a class history and,-- by the way, I just received a quart of genuine Gray Mare Scotch. It is rather late now, and I am sipping it as I write.

Well, now to get down to business. You know the class, assimilated from the East High Annexes and W. J. H. S., actually became organized under the advisory of Mrs. Toolan and Mr. Hammond in its Junior year. The class showed a great deal of enthusiasm over its first election of class officers. Results:

John Sleght--- President
Joe Truax --- Vice Pres.
Mildred Harris- Secretary
Alfred Rapp--- Treasurer.

Immediately class interest was aroused and why not, with a social committee, real class parties, the Junior Prom and the Junior Jubilee. Why a fellow would never have thought that there were such pretty girls in the class. What an orchestra! What punch! Oh say, as I remind myself about the punch, I begin to think of this Scotch. I've been drinking such bad stuff lately that this has little effect on me, little effect on me. I'm not bragging, bragging, but I believe our senior year, year was, less water, thank you, which proves that we all had a good time.

The Orient

Faced with the choice of having either a senior annual containing pictures of the seniors only or of combining with the Class of June 1927, in putting out one combined annual, the Class of January 1927, chose the latter alternative, and so this Orient is the first combined annual ever to be published at East High School. The movement to combine the annuals was started when various education officers frowned upon the practise of soliciting advertising for two class books.

Action of the Rochester Ad Club and of merchants in combating "bootleg" advertising has created a veritable dread against advertising in any medium but the newspaper. Business managers of the Orient this year had to combat these combatants, so to speak, and their work has been more difficult than the work of any previous managers. If editorial work was made any easier by combining the Janua and Orient, the editors have no testimonial letters to that effect.

The burning of the photographer's office and practically all of the Orient negatives shortly before Christmas threw the work way behind schedule.

MISS KATHERINE BURNS

Review of Dramatic Season

While Rochester playgoers murmured mournfully at a dramatic season that lacked much brilliance, East High dramatic followers were content and delighted. Plays of many varieties—mystery plays, costume presentations, and light comedies—were on the dramatic program of the past year. Three classes contributed talent enough to be developed by Miss Katherine Burns for the presentation of four productions.

After establishing its Barrymore talent in two presentations of the "Youngest" during the previous season, January 1927, began the 1927 dramatic menu with a professionally-toned production of "The Thirteenth Chair." The June graduates followed with the presentation of "Not So Long Ago," presenting it in a manner which brought out the historical charm of the play. The apparent ability of histrionic members of the June class to take part in costume plays led to the presentation of another pretentious costume play, "The Road to Yesterday."

The senior term class furnished the climax to the excellence of the year's bill with a cleverly produced comedy of college life, "At the End of the Rainbow."

During the mid-year the Faculty provided pupils of East High with enough admiration for their pedagogues to suffice for the rest of the semester.

The difficult task of carrying out the smoothness of all the class productions was admirably accomplished by Miss Katherine Burns. Those who understand the brain-racking intricacies connected with the proposition of presenting a play, marvel with no little admiration at Miss Burns' versatile, industrious role in East High.

Music

Orchestral music at East High school reached a new high standard this year under the direction of Karl Van Hoesen. Mr. Van Hoesen was called to East High School in September to replace David Mattern, an able conductor, who had accepted a position in Michigan. Perhaps the most difficult task in the world is that of living up to a tradition established by an unusually successful predecessor, yet Mr. Van Hoesen has done so well, that the work of the orchestra and band under his direction has been more advanced than it ever has been. The annual band and orchestra concert was presented before a large crowd with exceptionally laudatory criticisms.

Mr. Hinga has had a busy season with his glee clubs and quartets, most notable of which has been the boys' quartet. The opening of school in September found a group of four tall youths whom he molded into his "twenty-four feet of harmony," an unusually popular quartet. The work of the glee clubs has been of such a finished character this year that Mr. Hinga has begun work on the presentation of "Mikado" in June. This is the largest piece of work attempted by any local high school musical organization in recent years. Mr. Hinga has picked a remarkably able cast which should make for a most excellent production. "Mikado" will culminate years of hard effort on the part of Mr. Hinga and will undoubtedly prove a fitting climax to Mr. Hinga's work here.

Soccer

Once again, the soccer cup, emblematic of the championship of the Rochester and Vicinity Soccer League, returns to rest within the confines of the East High trophy case. Once again, not a single defeat mars the record of an East High soccer team, and another championship is added to an already impressive list.

Faced with a lack of experienced material, only four veterans remaining from 1925, Coach "Pete" McKay set out after the city championship. It did not take "Pete" very long to find out that he had the right material, but all that was needed was some constant drilling. Soon perfect co-ordination between a strong, aggressive forward wall, and a steady, capable back-field, developed by Coach McKay from a squad of willing candidates, displaced all individual play, and when time for the first game rolled around, East High was ready with a "dark horse" championship team, which proceeded to trounce every member of the league at least once. There were no "All Scholastic" teams picked by the various Rochester newspapers, but, had any teams been picked, such players as the Sundstrom brothers, Jim Brower, Mert Linhos, Capt. Dick Ader, Ed Hayes, would undoubtedly have been picked.

Basketball

Two decisive victories over East's traditional West High rivals, a pair of wins over Monroe High, new to East High's basketball schedule, and the shattering of a jinx held by the U. of R. Frosh over East High teams for the past four years, constitute the high lights of this year's colorful basketball season. The sensational shooting displayed by Ted Gordon and Hyman Bushkin, together with the fine floor game put up by Mike Kowal, and the steady, easy-going game of Morris Carr in contrast to the loping antelope dribble of Frank Gervasi was too much for East High's opponents. Rival after rival fell before the machine-like precision of the East High team. The team began the season with eight consecutive victories, which included a win over Fairport, a wholesale rout of West High by a score of 25-9, and a brilliant victory over Hutchinson of Buffalo. The team stopped off long enough in Griegsville to drop their first loss of the season, 23-21. Then, gathering impetus again, the team proceeded to steam-roll over West High, the U. of R. Frosh and Monroe High. In the inter-sectional tourney, an easy victory was won over Warsaw, but East High succumbed to the onslaught of a superior Fairport team in the semi-final round. Although Gordon, Bushkin, and Carr will leave school in June, "Doc" Fowle will have Kowal and Gervasi as regulars, and Levin and Cohen, first string substitutes, as a nucleus for next year's team.

Baseball

Coach "Pete" McKay had but two veterans, Mink and Kaminski, of last year, as a nucleus upon which to build the baseball team for the present season. The material this year has been of very high calibre and has helped to fill many positions left vacant by graduation. Coach McKay is working hard to retain the league championship.

FEATURES

Thrice welcome to this fairest land,
Home and seat of Prophecy.
Enter, and at thy command

Pleasing visions shalt thou see.
Round the land is known the fate
Of a class whose fame is wide.
Past and Future shall ope the gate;
He who wouldst know, to him they'll confide
Ere thy stay in this land is done,
Carried on the winds of Destiny,
Your fate shall be uttered ere set of sun;

Or else on the crystal waves of the sea.
Fear not, I see a royal sight;

Join we our hands, and let us draw near.
Under these colors of purple and white
Nestles a sprite whose voice I hear.
"Ever in after years," 'twas spoken,

"The members of this class shalt be
Worthy, honored, helpful; and clothed in
Enduring and sterling quality.
Not all may be the ones who lead;
This is not requisite for success.
Yet all shalt be known for their deeds,

Sincereness of purpose and truthfulness."
Ended the words of the spirit there.
Verily, not in all my years, three score and eleven,
Ever was class greeted with prophecy so fair,
Now go ye forth, and fulfill that of June '27.

Organized: November, 1925.

Motto: Ego, moi-meme.

Slogan: Modesty is the worst policy.

Laws: Be proud. Be satisfied. Believe little good of others. Love thyself more than thy neighbor. Thou shalt love no other than thyself.

Handshake: Raise the right hand, palm outward, to the eye-level. Then place the hand behind the back and tap lightly, but satisfiedly on the shoulder blade.

Purpose: "To spread the gospel of the perfectability of man by offering ourselves as examples of that perfectability."

Accomplishments: The club has officially condemned the following people to purgatory:

Edgar Guest

MANY years of agitation for a school pin to replace the many class pins that have been used at East High School culminated this year in the action of the Executive Council in voting for a standard school pin. The design for the pin was drawn by Charles Hendrickson, a pupil at the Goodman Annex, and approved by the Council as the design which best exemplified the school.

The charm of the pin lies in its delicacy in execution. The tower selected as the most representative feature of the architecture of the building, is in exceedingly good perspective.

A YOUNG STUDENT

Starting out in life asked a certain rich and wise man how to become rich.

The rich and wise man, being too busy to answer, reached into the drawer of his desk and handed out a printed sheet of paper.

"But," said the student, "This is only a compound interest table."

"True," said the rich man, "But, it is the best guide I can give you."

This same guide is offered to you every Monday that you may build for the future with the aid of compound interest
